Senate race

Markey wins US Senate seat in low-turnout election

Democratic Congressman Ed Markey defeated Republican opponent Gabriel Gomez in a sizeable win to fill the U.S. Senate seat formerly held by Secretary of State John Kerry, according to an unofficial tally by deadline last night. Recent polls had Markey, who currently represents the 5th Congressional District, in the lead throughout the campaign. Low voter turnout was attributed to voter fatigue — Massachusetts has had three elections in less than three years — and a heat wave. METRO

Security for Fourth of July fireworks heats up

Safety first. Mass. State Police announced new Fourth of July restrictions for Boston Esplanade celebration.

State Police said yesterday they plan to enforce new security measures at this year's July 4th Boston Pops Fireworks Spectacular at the Boston Esplanade.

The extra precautions, which include bans, amped up bag searches and metal detection, are a direct result of the Boston Marathon bombings that killed three and injured hundreds on April 15.

"We always had a solid, effective operational plan for the Fourth, but we knew from the day of the Marathon attacks that we would be reviewing and refining our plan," State Police spokesman David Procopio said yesterday.

Bombing suspect Dzhokhar Tsarnaev reportedly told interrogators that he and his brother, Tamerlan, originally planned to attack this year's July 4 celebration.

State Police said they constantly monitor threats, and that guests can feel safe at the Fourth festivities.

"We have absolutely no intelligence to suggest there is any specific threat to the event," said Procopio. "Regardless, we need to, and will, remain vigilant."

Boston 4 Productions spokesman Steve MacDonald said he expects the same turnout as previous years — at least 500,000 — and that the additional measures won't dampen the fun.

"People are more aware now because of what happened at the Marathon. We're just enhancing (the security measures) that we've always had. ... I think the public understands."

Banned

Backpacks, cans, premixed beverages, liquid containers over two liters that aren't clear and coolers with wheels are now banned.

- Everyone going into the oval, lagoon and island areas will be bag-searched and checked with a metal-detector wand.
- The perimeter surrounding the area has been expanded.
- The Massachusetts Avenue bridge will close to both cars and pedestrians at 4 p.m.

Not-so-crafty criminals. Robbers leave behind IDs

Two men recently arrested in separate incidents were their own worst enemies when they left behind identifying information at the scenes, authorities said.

A woman was robbed of her clutch purse late Monday while walking from the Fields Corner MBTA station. The man who robbed her left behind a pair of bags with clothes, shoes and his birth certificate.

In a prior incident on June 3, a Chelsea man left behind his debit card while attempting to rob a man who had given him a ride in Mattapan Square. METRO

Keep the change. Bill to decide who can get tips

The tip battle between supervisors and workers at coffee chains and other fast food restaurants is being waged on Beacon Hill again this year with both sides emphasizing the importance of tips for workers trying to earn a living wage.

Advocates argue the current law prevents regular employees from getting a portion of the tip pool if they have any managerial duties. SHNS

FBI agent falsified reports in Bulger's file, witness claims

Whitey trial. An agent with the Inspector General's Office was cross-examined by Bulger's attorney.

James "Whitey" Bulger's FBI handler made up and falsified information contained in reports in Bulger's FBI informant file, a Department of Justice agent said yesterday.

James Marra, an Inspector General's Office agent who conducted a review of Bulger's file, described some of the hundreds of reports in Bulger's file as "misleading or false" while being cross-examined yesterday by Bulger attorney Hank Brennan.

Marra also said former FBI agent John Connolly wrote most of the reports in Bulger's file. Connolly, a corrupt FBI agent who worked with Bulger and his gang, is currently in jail.

"When I went through the FBI file that existed for Mr. Bugler, I identified certain documents in there that were, in my opinion, fabricated by Mr. Connolly in regard to releasing information to Mr. Bulger and Mr. [Stephen] Flemmi," Marra said.

Marra said the documents fabricated by Connolly were drawn up to protect himself and the mobsters from their criminal activities.

Bulger's lawyers insist the alleged mob boss, 83, was not a federal informant and that Connolly fabricated the informant file to further his own career.

Brennan tried to underscore that contention by repeatedly asking Marra if he knew firsthand that Bulger gave Connolly the tips written in Bulger's file. Marra said he did not.

Brennan also repeatedly referred to Bulger's informant file, a government evidence exhibit against Bulger, as "Mr. Connolly's file."

California dreaming

Bulger's attorney filed a motion yesterday seeking to exclude the introduction into evidence of guns and cash found in the Santa Monica apartment where Bulger spent his time as a fugitive.

- Bulger's attorney argues the guns and cash have "no bearing on any aspect of the indictment."
- Prosecutors have listed about 50 exhibits related to the guns and cash.

Marra is likely to wrap up his time on the witness stand today, with John Morris, Connolly's FBI supervisor, who received immunity from the government, to follow.

Factory conditions.
Democrats push to stop Bangladesh trade benefits

Nine U.S. senators yesterday urged President Barack Obama to suspend trade benefits for Bangladesh until the country where 1,129 people died in an April garment factory collapse improved its working conditions.

"We urge that the administration suspend Bangladesh's eligibility for GSP (Generalized System of Preferences), and establish a roadmap and timeline for reinstatement based upon tangible improvements in worker safety and related labor law reforms," the group of Democratic senators said. REUTERS

Supreme Court guts key part of landmark Voting Rights Act

Voting act

Obama, Dems vow to act

President Barack Obama and Democrats in Congress yesterday promised to act swiftly to restore protections for the voting rights of African-Americans and other minorities after the Supreme Court struck down a core provision of the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

It was unclear whether Republicans, who control the House, would provide the support needed to offset the high court's ruling.

Rights. Obama calls on Congress to pass a new law ensuring equal access to voting for all.

The Supreme Court yesterday gutted a key part of the landmark Voting Rights Act, passed in 1965 to end a century of attempts by former slaveholding states to block black citizens from voting.

In a 5-4 ruling with the court's conservatives in the majority, the justices ruled that Congress had used obsolete reasoning in continuing to force nine states, mainly in the South, to get federal approval for voting rule changes affecting blacks and other minorities.

The court ruled in favor of officials from Alabama, by declaring invalid a section of the law that set a formula to determine which states need federal approval to change voting laws.

Field Director Charles White of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People speaks outside the Supreme Court yesterday. / GETTY IMAGES

"I am deeply disappointed with the Supreme Court's decision today," President Barack Obama said in a statement.

The ruling upended important legal protections for minority voters that were a key achievement of the U.S. civil rights movement of the 1960s led by Martin Luther King Jr. The decision also placed the burden on Congress — sharply divided along party lines — to pass any new voting rights law. LINCOLN TECH CELEBRATES 275 SKILLED, TRAINED GRADUATES

Smiles all around: new careers are on the horizon for Lincoln Tech grads.

More than 200 Lincoln graduates enter the Boston-area workforce with new skills, bright outlooks.

When a local health sciences and information technology career training school abruptly closed its doors at the beginning of 2013, students who had invested in their futures, and in many cases nearly completed their training, were suddenly shut out from continuing their education and pursuing the careers they'd worked so hard to train for. So when the state of Massachusetts asked for assistance in helping these students finish their training, Lincoln Technical Institute answered the call.

"We wanted to make sure the students had an opportunity to finish what they started," says Angela Corby, Executive Director of Lincoln's Brockton campus. "They came to us upset and very concerned that all the hard work, money, and time away from their families would be for nothing. With so many of our own students overcoming obstacles to train for new careers, we understood how difficult the decision to go back to school in search of a new profession could be. We knew we could help these students see it through, and we were going to do anything we could to ensure they would complete their education in spite of the circumstances."

The Lincoln Tech campuses in Brockton and Lowell together welcomed more than two dozen students from the shuttered school, and many of the students affected by the closing were among the roughly 275 graduates from both the Lowell and Somerville campuses who marked the completion of their Lincoln Tech training programs. These graduates are going on to start, or continue to pursue, careers in health science fields, Information Technology, and Therapeutic Massage. "Many of the new students had either just an externship or a few classes to finish in order to graduate," Corby says. "And after what initially could have been a demoralizing and discouraging interruption in their life plans, many of them commented they wished they could have spent more time with the Lincoln staff and faculty. What's even more thrilling is that many of the graduates were not only able to finish the education they started, but also received job offers from externship sites we were able to connect them with. We were able to turn what was a very unfortunate situation into a positive experience for many people."

No matter your situation or your circumstance, Lincoln Technical Institute can help you find the path to the career of your dreams. To learn more visit lincolnedu.com, or visit our local campuses in Brockton (365 Westgate Drive), Lowell (211 Plain Street), and Somerville (5 Middlesex Ave.).

Several graduates were recognized for special achievements and academic excellence.

Obama details plan to thwart climate change

Presidential power. Obama seeks to limit carbon emissions and stop pollution.

President Barack Obama launched a new plan to tackle climate change yesterday with a call to limit carbon pollution from all U.S. power plants.

Obama's long-awaited plan, detailed in a speech at Georgetown University, drew sharp criticism from the coal industry, which would be hit hard by carbon limits, and Republicans, who accused the Democratic president of advancing policies that harm the economy.

Obama's first-term attempt to reduce climate-warming carbon emissions in a "cap and trade" system was thwarted by Congress, and his administration's long process of studying whether to approve the Keystone XL pipeline has raised the hackles of business groups and Republican opponents.

Using his executive powers, Obama said he was directing the Environmental Protection Agency to craft new emissions rules for thousands of power plants, the bulk of which burn coal and account for roughly one-third of U.S. greenhouse gas emissions. REUTERS

Keystone. President says approve pipeline only if there are no emissions

President Barack Obama said yesterday that the Keystone pipeline should only be approved if it does not increase greenhouse gas emissions.

The Keystone XL pipeline, which would carry oil from Canada to refineries in Texas, was one of several topics Obama was expected to address in a climate change speech. REUTERS

The plan's domestic highlights

The White House yesterday released a plan to cut global carbon pollution and address the effects of climate change in three broad ways: cutting carbon pollution domestically, preparing the country to be resilient to climate-related impacts and leading international efforts to combat global warming.

- Obama will issue a presidential order to direct the country's chief environmental regulator, the Environmental Protection Agency, to complete performance standards for lowering carbon emissions from existing power plants with feedback from states, power companies and other stakeholders.
- The EPA is directed to finalize carbon limits for new power plants by Sept. 20.
- The EPA is directed to draft carbon limits for existing power plants by June 2014, to be finalized one year later.
- The Department of the Interior is tasked with permitting enough renewable energy projects on public lands by 2020 to power more than 6 million homes.

Russia rules out expulsion of Snowden, rejects 'ravings'

Putin said he hoped relations with the United States would not be affected by the affair. / GETTY IMAGES

Finding refuge.
Washington has gone to great lengths to try to ensure Snowden has nowhere to go.

Russian President Vladimir Putin confirmed yesterday that a former U.S. spy agency contractor sought by the United States was in the transit area of a Moscow airport but ruled out handing him over to Washington, dismissing U.S. criticisms as "ravings and rubbish."

In his first public comments since the fugitive flew in Sunday, Putin appeared to make light of the controversy around Edward Snowden, whose flight from U.S. authorities is becoming a source of increasing embarrassment for President Barack Obama. Asked by a journalist about the affair, he smiled fleetingly.

"I, myself, would prefer not to deal with these issues. It's like shearing a piglet: There's a lot of squealing, but there's little wool," he told reporters.

His refusal to hand over Snowden risked deepening a rift with the United States that has also sucked in China and threatens relations between countries that may be essential in settling global conflicts, including the Syrian civil war.

Putin said the 30-year-old American was in Moscow's Sheremetyevo airport and, not having gone through passport control, was free to leave.

"The sooner he chooses his final destination, the better it would be for us and for himself," he said.

Snowden has applied for asylum in Ecuador, which is reportedly still considering the application; the United States is trying to persuade the governments of countries where he might head to hand him over. His plans remain unclear. REUTERS

Charged

Edward Snowden has been charged by the U.S. government with disclosing secret NSA surveillance programs that the Obama administration considers vital to national security.

Payback?

Officials angry at Snowden's protectors

U.S. officials and lawmakers have made it clear they're furious at the governments that have played a role in enabling fugitive security contractor Edward Snowden's globetrotting, but Washington is expected to take a restrained approach to any retribution.

Federal officials and legislators angered and dismayed by the cat-and-mouse game have directed unspecified threats at Hong Kong, China and Russia, as well as Ecuador.

Washington has a range of options, which include making it difficult for citizens of these countries to get U.S. visas. Or it could impose sanctions on some imports and delay foreign investment deals, and curtail cooperation on extradition requests from the other capitals.

Tit-for-tat expulsions of accused spies were a staple of U.S.-Soviet relations during the Cold War. REUTERS

We check in with some of Hollywood's biggest names to see what they've been up to — in their own words, in 140 characters or fewer.

Today, Mindy Kaling is full, Chris Colfer wants to get up in the air, Paula Abdul is awfully nosy and Lena Dunham is having pet trouble.

@mindykaling: Cookies, cupcakes, Italian ice, sushi, steak, fries, creamed spinach, onion rings, s'mores, on my birthday we ate like I'm a Roman Emperor

@chriscolfer: Who is in charge of the minion blimp flying over LA and how can I get invited for a ride???

@PaulaAbdul: What projects are you working on this summer? Gardening? Remodeling? Organizing? Are you enjoying it with a friend?

@lenadunham: Things my dog has eaten today: an egg shell, a plastic bag that once contained meat, a Justin Bieber singing toothbrush

Holly Madison is engaged, with a big rock to prove it

1

Holly Madison! You in danger, girl!

It looks like the reality TV star is going through with her engagement with party promoter (and father to her infant daughter, Rainbow), Pasquale Rotella.

She showed off her giant new engagement ring, which was designed by Rotella, on her blog and to People magazine. The 18-carat yellow diamond ring is surrounded by pink and yellow flowers made from diamonds. And, oh yeah — owls.

"Because we love owls, there is a hidden owl engraved on the rose gold in between two of the flowers," she says. "The band is art nouveau-inspired, to go with the flowers."

Holly Madison's ginormous owl-themed ring is hopefully big enough that she will overlook the fact that she's marrying a man who will probably go to prison in the next year. Rotella is facing more than 13 years in prison on bribery, embezzlement, conspiracy and conflict of interest charges, per reports. The L.A. County district attorney says that Rotella, who owns a firm called Insomniac Events, used more than $2.5 million in funds from the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum to pay off city officials. Rotella would use the coliseum to host raves.

Rotella is currently out on a $1.8 million bail and is due back in court July 29. So basically, Madison, who was previously engaged to the 80-something Hugh Hefner, likes to choose mates who she thinks she won't have to be with for very long.

'Under the Dome' a huge hit for CBS

A lot of people tuned in to the premiere of the miniseries "Under the Dome" on Monday night. And I mean a lot a lot. CBS reported a whopping 13.1 million viewers for the first episode of the Stephen King adaptation. Entertainment Weekly says it's the most-watched summer debut on any network since NBC's "The Singing Bee" in 2007. Let's see if it can keep up those numbers over its remaining run of 12 episodes. / CBS

Miley Cyrus threatens her dad on Twitter

A word to the wise: If Miley Cyrus is trying to get a hold of you, answer her texts. Otherwise she might publicly threaten you.

On Tuesday, Miley tweeted at her father, Billy Ray Cyrus, "@billyraycyrus since you won't reply to my texts I'm giving you an hour to tell the truth or ill tell it for you." Attached to the tweet was a pic of Miley smiling for the camera with an unidentified older woman, according to Hollywood Life.

Billy Ray is in the midst of a divorce from Miley's mom, Tish Cyrus. Does Miley's tweet have something to do with their split?

We'll never know, as it was quickly deleted and disavowed by Miley, who tweeted, "Wtf? My twitter was just actin all types of cray!"

So there are three possibilities here. One, Miley was hacked. Two, she meant to send a DM and sent a tweet instead. Or three, Billy Ray did what she wanted before the hour was up.

Sweetin separates from third husband

3

Jodie Sweetin might not have the career of big TV and movie stars, but she certainly has the love life of one.

The former "Full House" star has confirmed that she's separated from her third husband, musician Morty Coyle, after a little over a year of marriage.

Just take a moment to let that sink in: Jodie is on her third marriage, and she's only 31.

And it only gets sadder: Jodie wants full custody of their daughter, Beatrix, 2, as well as their car, a Toyota Avalon.

Meanwhile, the Olsen twins are probably lighting giant cigars with burning $100 bills. The middle sisters always miss out.

New Rep's 'Jimmy Titanic' never lets go of the humor

Review. The one-man play about the famed shipwreck is anything but a disaster.

Colin Hamell plays more than 20 characters. / MICHAEL AND SUZ KARCHMER

Though "Jimmy Titanic" may lack the Hollywood sizzle of the film "Titanic," this charming, compelling interpretation of one of the biggest maritime disasters of all time is far more appealing.

As it turns out, simple storytelling, dry Irish humor and an incredibly talented creative team are all you really need to capture the gut-wrenching horror and seemingly inhumane reality of the ill-fated ship's calamitous date with destiny. And yet, this one-man play is also a finely tuned comedic production.

With nothing more than a black box and Tyler Lambert-Perkins' impeccably executed lighting design, Colin Hamell takes the audience on a journey from Belfast to heaven courtesy of 20-plus intriguing — and sometimes outlandish — characters.

Hamell effortlessly morphs from mortal characters like Jimmy Boylan and Tommy Mackey (the story's main characters) into celestial beings like the swishy, effeminate angel Gabriel and heaven's ladies' man, title character Jimmy Titanic, with little more than a slight gesture or vocal inflection.

The transitions are seamless and quick, but hardly effortless. Hamell is a whirlwind of activity in an 80-minute performance that vacillates between hilarity and heartbreak at lightning speed.

Whether regaling the crowd with tales of his dating life in heaven (where the women love men who perished on the Titanic), playing the blame game in Belfast or watching the ship depart — wondering aloud, "What [do] they have in America that we don't have here in Cork?" — Hamell's characters are all consistently masterful storytellers.

Be prepared to laugh out loud one minute while choking back tears the next. By adding names and faces, whether real or fanciful, playwright Bernard McMullan finds fresh fodder in old material. Likewise, director Carmel O'Reilly leaves no stone unturned in her tender and intermittently quirky interpretation of the tale that's been told many times before — but never quite like this.

‘Devious Maids’ features ‘two worlds colliding’

Dania Ramirez, Judy Reyes and Roselyn Sanchez star on “Devious Maids.” / ABC STUDIOS, GETTY IMAGES

Television. The new Lifetime series follows five Hispanic maids who work for some of the wealthiest families in Beverly Hills.

For decades, audiences knew her as a dramatic — some may even say melodramatic — soap actress. But there is another side to Susan Lucci.

“She is so hysterically funny, and I think that is something really new and interesting because I don’t think people have seen her be this funny and this free,” says Ana Ortiz, who stars with Lucci on the new Lifetime series “Devious Maids.”

“I used to look at people on film doing comedy,” says Lucci. “‘How do they do that with so many takes, so many bits and pieces.’ I already had so much respect for them.”

The series follows five Hispanic maids who work for some of the wealthiest and most powerful families in Beverly Hills. As the season is unveiled, the maids show they can be as devilish, scheming and witty as their employers.

“Devious Maids” is executive produced by Eva Longoria and Mark Cherry, who also created “Desperate Housewives.”

“Just the name Marc Cherry. ‘Marc Cherry has a new show? Yes, I would like to be a part of that.’ Then, when I read the script it was a page-turner,” says Lucci, who plays one of the high-society mavens. “There are hilarious aspects and then there are intriguing things: The twists, the turns, the surprises. He does them so well.

“All the characters,” says Lucci, “are fully realized characters. There is not one cardboard cartoon in the entire group.”

“There is hilarity, heart, drama and sex,” adds Ortiz, who played Hilda Suarez on “Ugly Betty.” It, like “Devious Maids,” was based on a successful Spanish-language TV show that aired in Latin and South America. “I have had good luck with these novellas-turned-American shows. For me it was a no brainer. There is, for lack of a better term, a real ‘Upstairs/Downstairs’ quality, that I think people are really tuning into right now,” says Ortiz. “It’s the two worlds colliding.”

Another view

Stereotype central?

“Devious Maids” has already faced criticism for its portrayal of Hispanic women as servants, criticism that Eva Longoria, who executive produces the series with Marc Cherry, takes exception to.

“You are telling me their stories aren’t worth telling, that maids are not complex, that they don’t have a life, that they don’t have a story to tell? They do,” Longoria says, who adds that mothers who worked as maids have raised many successful Hispanic people in the U.S.

“With the demographic of the United States changing rapidly, we should represent our diverse country on television.”

DJ School. Talking expansion with the Mmmmaven crew.

For David Day and Alex Maniatis, school is most definitely in for the summer. These auteurs of Together — Boston's weeklong, citywide electro fest that hits town each spring — are back to their "day jobs" running the Mmmmaven Project, a Cambridge-based school dedicated to getting aspiring DJs on the tables while teaching them about the many aspects of electronic music and DJ technology.

Less than a year after opening in Central Square, Mmmmaven just expanded, adding a studio and another classroom — but the push doesn't stop there.

"The next big thing is our online content," says Maniatis. "That's the big thing we're launching in two weeks. There'll be a lot more free online video tutorials, so our teachers can get that knowledge out there."

Maniatis sees Boston as a hotbed of electronic music and DJ talent eager to learn.

"Boston has a lot of young talent. It's kinda like when kids used to go into a guitar shop and ask for a Fender Stratocaster," says Maniatis. "Kids now go into a music shop and ask for beat-driven music-production software."

After starting their business via crowd-funding, sweat and favors, the proof of Mmmmaven's success isn't just in their physical expansion, but in having a staff and building a community.

"I get so much pleasure in giving people a wage for their expertise," says Day, with no hint of hubris. "The one-year plan has come to fruition. Online expansion is part of the plan, but the physical location and collaboration is more rewarding. Getting people together and seeing them work is what gives you goosebumps."

Gardner explores art of landscaping

See it. The museum's new exhibit tells origins of landscape architecture through photography.

This is an experimental fish farm along the Rue de Rivoli in Paris. Wouldn't that look cool on the Greenway? / PROVIDED

Despite what the name might imply, there won't be any lawnmowers present in Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum's new exhibit "Composite Landscapes: Photomontage and Landscape Architecture." Rather, the exhibit defines landscape architecture and explores the distinction between landscaping and gardening. (The former, as it turns out, is an entirely more artistic botanical enterprise.)

"Landscaping is specifically human, it's hard to imagine us without it," says Charles Waldheim, the exhibit's curator and chair of the department of landscape architecture at Harvard University's Graduate School of Design. "Though all cultures are involved with gardening, which involves the use of plant materials, not all cultures are involved in landscaping, which is spatial."

The first landscape architects, he says, were artists imagining space.

"Landscape first emerged in painting in western Europe, particularly in the British Isles," Waldheim explains. "In the 19th century, landscape architecture was a new profession, which fomented in and around Boston and the East Coast. It started in the public realm. The Fens is a good example. It involves the design and shape of a city. In the 1830s, it spun off and really was the beginning of city planning."

A landscape architect, then, doesn't necessarily have to have a background in or diverse knowledge of plants.

"Landscape architects work internationally and consult with plant experts locally," he says. "It's inconceivable that someone would have knowledge of local plants in the international marketplace."

"This is why this exhibit is important," he adds. "Landscape architecture begins with something that is drawn and involves planning common ground. It exists in the public realm, not in our private gardens. The term has been adapted to homes and leads to categorical confusion that we want to nudge away."

Security Deposits – Getting Your Money Back

By Attorney George Warshaw

Unfortunately many landlords still play games with security deposits.

I have received numerous requests for help by tenants wrongly denied their deposits.

Here's a refresher on the key "return" rules. Next week I'll recap the "taking and forfeiture" rules when a landlord requests a deposit.

Rule 1. The Penalty Box#1. The failure to return a security deposit without a recognized legal excuse within "30 days" of the end of occupancy renders the landlord liable for "treble" ("3x") damages; i.e. the original deposit plus 2x the amount withheld.

Rule 2. Unpaid Rent. A landlord may deduct for unpaid rent. No formal notice to the tenant is required.

Rule 3. Damage. A landlord may deduct for damage to the apartment caused by the tenant; but only in certain limited circumstances.

➢ The landlord must identify and document the damage caused and provide receipts for repairs.

➢ The letter or written explanation that notifies the tenant of the deduction must be signed by the landlord "under pains and penalties of perjury." If these magic words do not appear, the letter doesn't count and the landlord is liable for 3x damages.

➢ The letter must be sent within the 30 days.

Rule 4. No Deduction Allowed. Redecorating, cleaning, trash removal and reasonable wear and tear are not deductible items. © 2013 George Warshaw.

Get the feminine touch

Trending. Menswear is becoming all about women. A growing band of female designers are changing the way men dress.

Sarah Burton's Alexander McQueen S/S '14 show was a standout during the collections. / CATWALKING.COM

For centuries men have dominated the fashion houses with their ideas about how women should look. But a growing band of women designers are getting a little of what's owed, tackling menswear with radical approaches and immense talents. It's about time, too.

From Sarah Burton's twisted creations for Alexander McQueen to swaggering new kids like Katie Eary, Martine Rose and Astrid Andersen, most of the collections unveiled during London's recent menswear shows had women designers at the helm. The redressing of gender imbalance is laudable, but how does it impact the clothes on the runway and, ultimately, what men wear?

Andersen believes that the increased numbers of women designing for men was inevitable. After all, she says, "Women know how they want men to dress."

But that's not the whole story.

"The best designers have their own unique aesthetic. And whether that is women designing for men, it is the aesthetic that counts," argues Terry Betts, buying manager at MrPorter.com. Although he concedes, "I feel women think about how the clothes work for men in 'real life.'"

Betts names Eary as one designer to watch for her ability to use bold print and color — her fall 2013 collection combined pink roses of dinner-plate proportions with razor-sharp tailoring — in a way that feels "distinctly masculine."

Rather than focusing on the gulf between womenswear and menswear, these female designers are increasingly taking traditional elements of how men and women dress and juxtaposing them to reinvent the menswear genre. Burton's spring 2014 menswear show provided a case in point. She poked fun at stereotypical "feminine" flourishes like lilac lace, billowing silk and even Mary Jane shoes by blending them with McQueen's signature tailoring. The results didn't feel girlie at all.

In the Internet age, men are bombarded with images of musicians and athletes wearing items direct from the catwalk as never before. While lace suits might not be for everyone, this liberated approach has a trickle-down effect and this means, according to Betts, "Men are definitely willing to take more risks."

Of course it's not just female designers who are doing this. J.W. Anderson's training as a womenswear designer sees him push boundaries with proportion and fabric in his menswear, and his fall collection featured macho male models striding the runway in leather dresses and frilly hot pants.

Analysis

Fringe benefits

Perhaps their "outsider" status makes it easier for women to question the norms of men's fashion with objectivity.

- "The perceived restrictions on menswear make it much more interesting to play with," says designer Martine Rose, who considers Prince her dream client. Andersen, whose signature look combines hip-hop references with feminine color and fabric, agrees: "What I love with menswear is that there is no escaping functionalism, but with womenswear there are always loopholes."

ACCESSORIZE ME! ENHANCE YOUR GAMES WITH THESE GADGETS

Video games are not just about console and television. There's a whole world out there of sometimes cool, sometimes ridiculous accessory devices. Here are reviews of a few new things vying for your precious living-room space.

Korg Kaossilator Pro+

Korg, $299

Korg's new touchscreen-based synthesizer is only ostensibly gaming-related. It is, however, a perfect entry point to jump into the burgeoning world of chiptune (video game) music. The sound bank contains tons of NES and SNES blips and the unit is built from the ground up to cater to non-musicians. You'll be making it sound like Mario is rhythmically collecting coins in no time. And, yes, it can also make other kinds of music.

MAKE OLD-TIME VIDEO GAME MUSIC WITH THE KORG KAOSSILATOR PRO+. TOMUJII

Hauppauge HD PVR 2 Gaming Edition

Hauppauge, $199

Along with makeup tutorials and creepy videos in which mustached men try to hypnotize you, the video game walkthrough is one of the more popular YouTube genres. A vital tool in their arsenal is an HD recording device. You'd be hard-pressed to find an item more up to this task than Hauppauge's new HD PVR 2 game-centric video recorder. It offers live recording in 1080p so you'll never miss your most precious gaming moments. It works flawlessly, but the next-gen consoles (particularly the PS4) are eyeing this idea for their own systems.

Genius Arcade F-1000 Stick

Modern controllers are great for certain genres — first-person shooters being the best example. Fighting games, however, really shine when you get a hold of an old-school joystick. The F-1000 is a great example of modern design mixed with retro favorites, like turbo buttons. This is all you'll need to be a major player in the world of competitive gaming. Just a warning: It only supports PS3 and PC. If you are an Xbox gamer, you'll have to look elsewhere.

THE F-1000 ARCADE STICK ALLOWS YOU TO PLAY LIKE YOU WOULD IN THE ARCADE. GENIUS

Remote brake lights warn of danger before it's seen

Ford is working on remote, wireless brake lights that warn drivers. In this new scenario, drivers will see a dashboard light illuminate when there's danger ahead.

It's easy to see the brake lights of a panic-stopping car right in front of you. But what if that car ahead is around a corner, over a hill or driving through a dense fog or rainstorm? Ford is testing technology that can warn you of such danger as part of its Safe Intelligent Mobility research project that involves 20 futuristic systems that could make cars safer.

The remote brake-light system would be particularly adept at avoiding chain-reaction collisions, where a car far ahead of you comes to a sudden stop and multiple cars can't stop in time to avoid a multi-car collision. With this brake light on your dashboard, you'll be warned of panic stops before you become directly involved in their aftermath.

Car-to-car communication is a crucial link in the development of self-driving vehicles. Companies such as Google have already developed extremely smart cars that can drive themselves, but the safety of such systems will be even closer to perfection if cars can communicate their intent with each other.

Ford is also testing technology for vehicle-to-infrastructure communications, known in the industry as "V2I." That technology has a variety of uses, such as cars being able to communicate with traffic lights, minimizing drivers' frustration of sitting at a red light with no other cars within miles. V2I technology can also let a driver know if the vehicle's current speed will result in being stopped at the next red light. It can even be used to stop the car at a traffic signal, avoiding running a red light.

Ford is not the only company working on these types of communication. For instance, Mercedes announced on June 20 that its first car-to-car communication system would launch this year.

Mercedes admits that such a car-to-car system will be minimally effective if it's only installed aboard one make and model of car. Mercedes says it's working with other car manufacturers to allow all vehicles to communicate with each other using this technology.

Ford's field testing of its SIM technology took place in Frankfurt, Germany, and included 500 test drivers in 120 vehicles, Ford said. According to the automaker, those test subjects spent more than 41,000 hours on public roads and on a closed track, where they tested the technology.

Brakes may soon warn drivers of danger ahead — even the ones who can't see the lights. / MASHABLE

Yes, you should get an HIV test

Health. National HIV Testing Day is the perfect day to do it.

It's not at the top of anyone's fun-things-to-do list (far from it!), but tomorrow is National HIV Testing Day, and it isn't a date to ignore. According to the Centers for Disease Control, in the United States alone, around 1.2 million people have HIV and an estimated one in five people don't know they're infected. Dr. Donna Futterman, director of the Adolescent AIDS Program at The Children's Hospital at Montefiore in Bronx, N.Y., says everyone who is sexually active — everyone — should be tested annually.

"People aren't totally aware," Futterman says. "Sixty percent of teens and younger adults don't know they are infected, and 20 percent of older adults don't know either. This is why HIV continues to spread."

Besides stemming the spread of infection, HIV testing means that people with the virus can be diagnosed and get the medical help they need. HIV is not the same horrifyingly deadly disease it was in the '80s; it's now survivable with treatment.

"We are trying for prevention, and to get the message to people that you can avoid HIV. But we also want people to know that if you have it, we can help," Futterman said.

Futterman says that your doctor might not think to ask you for an HIV test, and that you should be the one to bring it up.

"Everyone should get HIV testing, but it's just not done," she says. "You have to think about it for yourself and protect yourself."

LINDA CLARKE

"You don't need this disease," Dr. Futterman says. "The virus does long-term damage and your life becomes medicalized." WAVEBREAK MEDIA

All about the tests

You can get an HIV test that's fast, simple, painless and anonymous (or confidential). Oral fluid tests are a quick swab in the mouth that can detect the virus in less than an hour. Blood and urine tests are also options.

One new way to get an HIV test is through a combo test. HIV combo tests (also called fourth-generation tests) can provide accurate results within two weeks of exposure to HIV (normally, you have to wait three or four weeks to get an accurate diagnosis) because they can spot antigens — the actual HIV virus — as well as antibodies. The blood test is made by Abbott, which was the first lab to market an HIV test, in 1985. The tests are covered by insurance.

To find an HIV testing center near you, visit http://hivtest.cdc.gov/default.aspx. And to find a testing center that offers HIV combo tests, visit www.hivcombo.com.

"There's no human behavior change without constant messaging. People have not gotten the message. It might not kill you, but HIV is still a big deal. It's a lifelong infection."

30-second lifesaver...

With Laura Miranda, MSPT, CSCS

In this new section, we'll have an expert give us one easy tip that can change your life.

This week's tip comes from Laura Miranda, MSPT, CSCS, a fitness pro and physical therapist. Miranda and her team lead boot camps and group high-intensity interval-training runs around Manhattan and Long Island throughout the week. For more, visit www.stronghealthywoman.com.

Count seconds instead of reps: Perform 30-second intervals of as many reps as you possibly can do with full-out effort. Pushing your muscles to full exhaustion in this slightly different manner than the traditional "set of 10 reps" will guarantee to blast through any weight loss/workout plateau, and will yield maximum results in a short amount of time.

Learning by example

Re: 'What's faith ever done for anyone, anyway?' (Metro, June 18) I'm glad letter writer Amanda Canetti likes The Beatles; I do, too. We often need others to express things differently so we understand the truth more fully. Religion isn't just about "a deity," but about humanity. Jesus was human and showed us how to follow God in ordinary life. I need examples to see what does and doesn't work.

Everyone can get an 'A' in morality class

Re: 'Morality needs some absolutes' (Metro, June 24) Though I am an atheist, I don't reject religion; I recognize it has much to teach and I am open to those lessons. However, to letter writer Gilbert Colon I would point out that to an atheist, his "objective, divinely inspired" morality is just as non-binding as any. The difference is, while he anticipates an eternal reward, I expect no reward for treating others with kindness and respect. I respect any path that leads to goodness, but must question any group that grades goodness on a curve based on belief in a particular deity.

What you should know about genetic testing and cancer

Actress Angelina Jolie shocked the world last month when she shared her decision to have a preventative double mastectomy after testing positive for the BRCA1 gene mutation.

The BRCA mutation, which stands for BReast CAncer susceptibility, is an inherited gene that sharply increases a woman's risk of developing breast or ovarian cancer.

Although cancer is not usually an inherited disease – approximately 5 percent of all cancers are inherited – scientists have identified several defective or mutated genes that increase the potential of developing certain cancers, including breast, ovarian, stomach, colon, and prostate, as well as some rare cancers.

But how do you know if genetic testing is right for you?

If a family has a history of certain types of cancers, a genetic test can help survivors and other family members determine whether they carry a gene mutation that puts them at a high risk for the disease. Finding out about these gene mutations early can help patients and doctors take steps to detect cancer early or prevent it altogether.

"Some cancers can cluster more in families," says Judy Garber, MD, MPH, director of Dana-Farber's Center for Cancer Genetics and Prevention and one of the leaders of the Institute's Susan F. Smith Center for Women's Cancers. "We've learned a lot about genes and can help people understand if it is chance, or not, that a cancer may affect relatives and what the risk is to family members," Screening for gene mutations is an easy blood or saliva test, but knowing what to do with the results is the bigger question. If you decide to undergo genetic testing, physicians at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute's Center for Cancer Genetics recommend you also participate in genetic counseling. This counseling will help you understand the information the genetic test will provide as well as any implications of a positive or negative result.

It is also important to check with your insurance company on coverage of genetic testing. Most private insurance companies cover some of the cost, but some selfinsured plans have exclusions on genetic testing.

If you test positive for genetic mutations, you can work with a physician on careful monitoring to stay ahead of any potential cancer development. In some cases, patients decide to undergo surgery to prevent the cancer altogether, such as removing the breasts or ovaries.

Physicians at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute's Center for Cancer Genetics and Prevention work with patients to create a personalized program to help estimate cancer risk and ways to lower that risk as much as possible.

More options

Genetic testing is not the only option for cancer prevention; regular health screenings such as colonoscopies or mammograms can help detect cancer in its early stages, when it is most treatable.

Maintaining a healthy body weight and exercise can also help decrease the risk of certain types of cancer.

"Biggest Winner" A Fun Way To Help People Learn More About Their Diabetes Management

Living with diabetes can be challenging, but it doesn't have to run your life. Neponset Health Center in Quincy recently developed the "Biggest Winner" competition, a fun way to help people learn how to improve their diabetes management.

Maureen McGinnis and Maureen Bennett, patients who participated in the competition and are living with diabetes, spoke with Neighborhood Health Plan (NHP) about the skills they learned to better manage their diabetes. They hope that others can learn from their experience.

"Eating right, taking your medications, getting exercise are all important," Ms. McGinnis said. "This program gave us resources to help tackle diabetes."

Participants found that meeting as a group helped them learn from others about how they manage diabetes.

"It's good to talk with other people who have diabetes," said Ms. Bennett. "To find out that other people have the same problems you have, and to be able to share how they deal with these issues is important."

"When you're talking about diabetes, thinking about diabetes and reading about diabetes each meeting, it's at the front of your mind," said Ms. McGinnis.

Dr. Michael Conley, PharmD, from the Neponset Health Center, helps lead the "Biggest Winner" competition. Dr. Conley talked to NHP about how to join the program and what you can learn.

How does the "Biggest Winner" Competition work?
We created the competition to provide group education for patients who want to make lifestyle changes and better understand their diabetes. Over a three-month period, we meet every two weeks with a group of 5-10 patients. Every week, we raffle off prizes or provide people with tools to help manage their diabetes (measuring cups, pillboxes, calorie counting books, etc.). At the end of the program, we enter the people who have followed the program guidelines in a raffle to win a Wii and a Wii Fit.

What are helpful tips for how best to manage diabetes?
The best ways to manage your diabetes are:

- Taking your medication;
- Eating healthy; and
- Getting exercise.

Why is being active, eating healthy and taking medication so important to managing diabetes?
They're so important because they all help to reduce the risk of long-term complications that result from having your blood sugar level too high for too long. Also, reducing long-term complications significantly lowers your health care costs.

Do you have any patient success stories?
The first time we ran this program, I had a patient who I had been seeing for a few years. She didn't always take care of her health, but she joined the competition, came to every meeting, and was very engaged. At the end, we checked her labs, and her blood sugar improved to levels that I'd never seen before. By participating in the group, she had goals to work toward, which really helped motivate her to take better control of her health.

What are the key lessons you hope your patients take away from this program?
The biggest lesson I hope they learn is self-management. Diabetes is a life-long disease and the most important thing we can do is to make sure they have the best tools to handle the disease.

IT'S COOL TO EAT FRESH FRUITS AND VEGGIES WHEN IT'S HOT

Fresh fruits and vegetables are easy to find as the weather gets warmer. You can buy lots of different locally grown kinds at area farmers' markets or fruit and vegetable stands. You can also find a large variety of fresh fruits and vegetables in the produce section of your grocery store year round.

By eating a mixture of brightly-colored fresh fruits and vegetables, you and your family will:

- Stay cool when it gets hot, since fruits and vegetables contain a lot of water
- Get lots of the vitamins and minerals that your body needs to stay healthy
- Have more energy from replacing sugary or processed food with fresh foods

And, when you shop at local farmers' markets and fruit and vegetable stands, you'll also:

- Help your community by supporting local farmers/growers
- Create family togetherness when you shop together and discover new healthy food options
- Give your children the chance to learn more about the many kinds of fruits and vegetables that are available

By shopping at a local farmers' market or fruit and vegetable stand, you should also enjoy healthier fresh food since your produce will not have traveled as far or been handled as much as food shipped from a great distance. Plus, often local farms participating in farmers' markets will offer non-produce items such as home-made cheese, jam, and breads, and some will offer free samples for you to try. You can also often find local flowers and plants to buy to brighten your summer lunch or dinner table.

Many Farmers' Markets Accept EBT Cards (SNAP)

While you might think it costs more, sometimes fresh local food can be less expensive because farmers don't have to pay to ship food over long distances like some grocery stores do. And some Massachusetts farmers' markets accept EBT cards from those who qualify for the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP). Visit www.massfarmersmarkets.org to learn more.

Our online Wellness Center in the Living Healthy section makes it easy for you to search for farmers' markets throughout Massachusetts. Visit us at ChooseBMCHP.org to find a farmers' market near you.

Brought to you by BMC HealthNet Plan, a Massachusetts managed care organization serving more than 275,000 MassHealth and Commonwealth Care members. Chris Kelly sent the TD Garden crowd into a frenzy in the first period of Game 6 of the Cup Final Monday night, but the joy lasted only so long. / GETTY IMAGES

Highest of highs gives way to the lowest of lows

NHL playoffs. The Bruins were just 77 seconds away from forcing a Game 7, but let the Cup slip away.

Seventeen seconds will haunt the Bruins the entire offseason and perhaps beyond that. Boston had gone up 2-1 on Milan Lucic's goal with 7:49 left in the third period of Game 6 of the Stanley Cup Final at TD Garden Monday and looked poised to force what would likely have been an unforgettable Game 7 tonight in Chicago. Unfortunately for Boston, the Blackhawks had other plans, as Bryan Bickell tied it with 1:16 left, then Dave Bolland scored the Cup-clinching goal just 17 seconds later, sliding it by Tuukka Rask.

Asked to compare this feeling to what they experienced after rallying to beat Toronto, 5-4, in overtime in Game 7 of the Eastern Conference quarterfinals, Rask said, "Yeah, well we've done it to somebody else, so we got to feel how it feels being on the other side. We made it a great run. Too bad we just couldn't finish it off."

The Blackhawks earned it by winning the last three games of the series after trailing 2-1 following Boston's 2-0 shutout victory in Game 3.

"All of a sudden, you felt like so much weight was on your back," Bruins center David Krejci said about the stunning comeback. "I'll be replaying the last two goals for a while. I don't know what happened."

This felt like such a cruel loss for the Bruins since they scored first, then broke the 1-1 deadlock late in the third period.

"This is a great group of guys," Bruins head coach Claude Julien said. "It'll take a little while to realize our accomplishment, but right now it doesn't feel good."

SO DOC RIVERS WENT RING CHASING: GOOD FOR HIM, I SUPPOSE

The dust has cleared. The Doc Rivers era is over in Boston. Here's everything you need to know about the affairs of the Celtics-Rivers marriage in three statements which may (or may not) be mutually exclusive:

- With the star system that permeates the league, the NBA has roughly five teams that can realistically win a championship in any given year.

- Glenn "Doc" Rivers is one of the best coaches in the NBA. He is paid accordingly and is owed $21 million over the next three seasons.

- As currently constituted, the Celtics are not one of the aforementioned five best teams in the running.

Here are three implications from the three previous pillars we've assigned to the Celtics-Rivers divorce:

- All told, the Clippers have a roster that, with the right coach, could win a championship.

- In my time covering the Celtics beat, Doc Rivers was a swell dude and pleasure to talk to. The media adores him. He's been classified as a player's coach, and that statement goes beyond him being extroverted and a people person. Rivers literally has the mindset of a player (more on this later).

- In the here and now, the end game of paying Rivers to coach a team with a potential upside of 50 wins and an early playoff exit doesn't behoove the Celtics or Rivers. Nor is it pragmatic.

Now, the devil's advocate would like a word.

- Coaches can hurt or help a cause, but ultimately the NBA is a player's league. Case in point, before The New Big Three era, Rivers went 102-144 in his first three seasons coaching the Celtics.

- The idea of "Ubuntu," a philosophy Rivers impressed upon the 2007-08 champi-onship team that preaches community, with its mantra of "I am because we are," over anything else, is as real as the "Patriot Way" or Manti Teo's "girlfriend." Ray Allen figured that out a year before every-one else.

- Finally, mercenaries can be nice guys, too.

OK. That was a little harsh. Let's meet in the middle:

- Rivers is a recruiter and mas-termind, but knows that his influence only goes as far as the players compromising his roster, and at this stage of the game, Chris Paul/Blake Grif-fin are more appealing than an aging Paul Pierce/Kevin Garnett playing alongside a rehabilitated Rajon Rondo.

- Doc's level of commitment to the Celtics appeared strong when he signed his extension in 2011. Actions, however, speak louder than words, and with rebuilding on the hori-zon, Rivers jettisoned quicker than a 21-year-old college kid the morning after a one-night stand. He's still a swell guy, of course; but he's also savvy, and has the mindset of a player in the contemporary sense — mixing and matching assets to create a super team. He's no better than LeBron James, but it should be noted that LeBron James just won back-to-back championships. Not a bad model to follow.

- He'll be remembered fondly, but long-term Doc could have been recognized as a fixture in Boston sports history. He's already won a championship, and it's been long understood that the team was in need of a complete overhaul — meaning there is little pressure to put together winning seasons. In-stead, he went championship chasing. Gutsy call, I guess. All that aside, it feels dirty to say, but in the end, Doc was good for Boston and Boston was good for Doc. Despite how he went about manufac-turing his exit, sometimes, that's enough.

NBA dealing

Celtics, Clippers banned from making more deals

Doc Rivers will speak into a microphone in Los Angeles today as the new head coach of the Clippers. Don't expect Kevin Garnett or Paul Pierce to be joining him on the left coast anytime soon.

CBS Sports reported yesterday that the NBA will not allow the Celtics and Clippers to make any more deals with each other for an entire year. This would prevent the C's from rekindling any deal that would send Garnett to L.A. in exchange for DeAndre Jordan, a deal that had been rumored for over a week. According to ESPN's Marc Stein, three-way deals involving the two clubs are not allowed either.

Kevin Garnett and Paul Pierce won't be joining Doc Rivers in L.A., at least for another year. / GETTY IMAGES

Stein also reported yesterday that several teams are interested in acquiring Paul Pierce and that the Celtics are open to trading their captain as soon as this week. The Cavaliers and Bucks have both expressed interest in Pierce, according to Stein's report yesterday. The Celtics are said to be asking for a first-round pick.

Celtics president of basketball operations Danny Ainge must make a decision on Pierce by Sunday. The Celtics can either pick up his option for the 2013-14 season, worth $15 million, or buy him out. MATT BURKE
